Phoenix Tears' Guide to Using RSO

What is RSO (Rick Simpson Oil)?

RSO is a full extract cannabis oil (FECO) designed for oral or topical use. Each syringe contains 3g of pure cannabis extract, extracted using food grade ethanol. Also called THC Oil, Weed Oil, Dagga Oil or just Cannabis Oil.

Which patients may be interested in RSO?

RSO's first use was for curing skin cancer - basal cell carcinoma. Since then it has been used for a wide array of conditions including Crohn's Disease (highly effective), insomnia, anxiety, Multiple Sclerosis and Alzheimer's Disease.

RSO is often used by patients who need a continued medical effect and symptom relief over a long period of time.

How to use RSO

Start with a small amount - half a grain of rice. Your personal tolerance will build up over time until you're able to ingest a grain of rice amount or more. Note that the product may leave you feeling light-headed and may be more suitable to be taken at night.

For topical applications, put a small amount of oil under a bandage and apply every day until you notice an improvement. Continue until you're satisfied with the outcome.

Ways to prepare to use RSO

It is recommended that patients slightly warm the product before usage due to its viscosity or thickness. This will help all patients with ease of dosing especially those who struggle with dexterity.

Hold the RSO syringe in your hand for a few minutes.

Or, place the RSO syringe in a bowl of warm water, taking care that the capped applicator side is submerged and the plunger side stays dry.

Or, place the capped applicator side of the RSO syringe under warm, running water, making sure the plunger side stays dry.
